

Co-hostesses Preside At One of Spring's Smartest Parties

Appreciative of the charming effect wrought by floral arrangements and all details of the luncheon given yesterday at Santa Ana Country club by Mrs. George S. Smith and Mrs. P. R. Reynolds, their guests declared it to be one of the most attractive and enjoyable parties to have distinguished the early spring months in this city.

The clubhouse was a-bloom with flowers of every description, some from the gardens of the two hostesses, including some especially fine gladioli in whose growing Mr. Smith takes such pride, while others were sent by friends, including two artistic baskets from Los Alisos, the home of Mrs. Angus J. Cruikshank. The artistry of the table arrangement was due to Miss Bertha V. Tiede, who combined centrepieces, smiling golden marguerites, columbaria and gypsophylla with cool green maidenhair ferns to garland the tables where the delectable luncheon menu was served.

Mrs. Reynolds and Mrs. Smith conformed to their floral decorations by wearing pretty chiffon gowns in flowered design, made with gracefully long skirts. Receiving with them was Mrs. Smith's daughter, Mrs. Rodney B. Atsatt, of Santa Barbara, who came down for the function. She, too, wore a graceful flowered chiffon, and like the hostesses, completed her costume with a colorful corsage bouquet.

Assisting in pleasant duties incidental to checking arrivals, tallies, etc., were Mrs. Joseph H. Metzgar and Mrs. Hugh Wiley, while at the luncheon hour, in addition to the tables presided over by Mrs. Reynolds, Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Atsatt, were other small groups each with its individual hostess. Mrs. Robert G. Tuthill, Mrs. W. E. Winslow, Mrs. Ella Campau, Mrs. Terry E. Stephenson, Miss Rosa Boyd, Mrs. Charles Riggs and Mrs. Arthur Lyon were the friends asked to assist in this pleasant manner.

Bridge in the afternoon resulted in Mrs. Robert Mize scoring high; Mrs. Winnie Conner, second high, and Mrs. A. G. Flagg third high. All the gifts were wrapped and tied in harmony with the prevailing pastel tones.

Among out of town guests in addition to Mrs. Atsatt, were Mrs. Emerson J. Markin, of San Diego, Mrs. Alice Harris and her daughter, Mrs. Michael Thompson, of Los Angeles, and Mrs. William Struber, of Hollywood.

Oriental Motif Is Carried Out at Luncheon

Availing themselves of the opportunity to honor their hostesses, Mrs. Adolph Erickson and her daughter, Miss Verena Bailey, at the regular meeting of the Flying Needle club held this week in the Erickson home, 1041 West Sixth street, guests presented them with lovely gifts in celebration of their natal days. Miss Bailey received a strand of crystals while her mother was given a velvet rug.

Having just returned from San Francisco where they enjoyed a visit to Chinatown, the hostesses employed an Oriental motif during the luncheon served. Favors were tiny pickle forks and mustard spoons, and centering the table was a large Chinese doll shaded with a cunning parasol. A typical Chinese menu was served.

Afternoon hours were spent sewing. Mrs. F. W. Bergendorff received the hostess prize, a Chinese bowl.

Those present, other than Mrs. Erickson and Miss Bailey, were Mesdames Frank Brown, F. W. Bergendorff, Delbert Johnson, William Kintz and Bernard Snee.

Friendly Group Plans House-warming With Pretty Gifts

A group of some 20 friends of Mr. and Mrs. Thelma Patterson, interested in the attractive home of the young people since remodeling operations were completed on the property on the Trabuco road, planned a house-warming as one of the pleasant events of the week, taking their hosts completely by surprise.

Mrs. Patterson was formerly Mrs. Olive Currie, and her wedding to the well-known young rancher was an event of last September and took place in Yuma. On the day of the house-warming Mrs. Patterson was in Costa Mesa visiting her relatives, and returned to her home in the early evening to find the guests assembled. Mr. Patterson was no less surprised to come in from his ranch duties to be greeted by such a merry crowd.

Everyone had taken special dishes for the covered dish dinner, and hot coffee was soon in readiness. The menu comprised all manner of toothsome meats, salads, vegetable and sweets, and was served at a table laid the full length of the big living room so that all the guests might be accommodated at once.

An additional surprise feature for the housewarming when they were presented with a variety of attractive things for their home. The gifts ranged from pillows to magazine rack, end table, and a coffee table among other gifts.

In the evening, after a survey of the rose garden and other details of the grounds in which Mrs. Patterson takes special interest, the guests gave their attention to Michigan as the diversion until the party came to a close.

Plans for the pleasant affair were made by Mrs. Allen A. Mandy and Mrs. William A. West, and there were several out-of-town guests to share the evening.

Mrs. J. H. Thompson's 53rd birthday anniversary was anticipated by a group of her friends as an opportunity to share the hospitality of the Thompson home, 917 West Myrtle street, and so it was that they gathered there Thursday evening for a surprise affair.

Most of the plans for the party were made by the honoree's daughter, Mrs. A. R. Mitchell.

Mrs. Thompson's favorite game, bunks, was chosen as entertainment for the evening. With the checking of tallies it was found that Mrs. Loretta Trowbridge and Ernest Ward held high scores. Consolation prizes were awarded Mrs. Ward and Ray Breeze. All of the prize winners were from Los Angeles.

At a late hour appetizing refreshments were served to Mrs. H. M. Mull, San Fernando; Dan Corlis, Mrs. May Grimes, Mrs. Loretta Trowbridge, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Ward, Francis Andrews and Ray Breeze, Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. N. Ellidge, Mr. and Mrs. A. Pretty Fullerton Girl And Placentia Man Are Betrothed

Completely surprising their many friends throughout Orange county, Miss Morda Carroll, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mortimer Carroll of Fullerton, and Jack Harmony, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Harmony of Placentia, announced their engagement at a party at the home of Miss Carroll, 421 West Brookdale avenue, Fullerton, Friday evening. The wedding will be an event of next fall.

The secret was revealed by clever favors of airplanes speeding to friends and carrying the news inscribed on cargo slips of paper with the names, "Morda and Jack." During the evening the game of hearts was played with Miss Betty Brewster receiving the first prize and Miss Jean King, consolation. Following the game the guests danced to the radio on the wide balcony of the Spanish home.

A dainty one-course refreshment menu was served, in which the pastel color decoration theme was carried out in rose and green crystalware and linens.

Miss Carroll is well known, having attended the Fullerton schools for several years. She will graduate from the high school of that city with the current graduating class. She has taken an active part in campus organizations and had an important role in "The Red Mill" which was presented last year. Recently she was chosen the Fullerton queen of the Orange County Valencia Orange Show and Fair.

Mr. Harmony, prominent athlete who graduated from Fullerton junior college last year, is now connected with the Placentia Mutual packing house as basement manager.

Alpha Rho Tau Masque Enjoyed By College Young People

Exotic in its decorative details was the studio masque given Thursday night as an entertaining affair of the semester by the Santa Ana junior college Alpha Rho Tau in the art studio. With the red, yellow, green and orange balloons dangling from the ceiling and with the corresponding shades in different sized circles against a black and silver background simulating the starry heavens, the school room became truly a unique place with softly glowing lights to illumine the scene. This had been accomplished by Robert Marshall, Miss Elizabeth Straw, Harley Melzain and Miss Virginia Pope.

Dressed in a variety of costumes the members and guests lined up and Harley Melzain and Miss Anna Gilles, because of their unusual costumes, were selected to reign as king and queen of the evening with the privilege of commanding their subjects to do their bidding. Additional honor was conferred on Harley Melzain when he was chosen unanimously as the new president. Mrs. June Healey, past secretary-treasurer, was selected as the new vice-president, an office which includes the duties of social commissioner, and Miss Florence Pollock was voted secretary-treasurer. Following the election Miss Maybelle Ball, president, turned the meeting over to the new president.

Dancing, cards and stunts formed the amusements of the evening and refreshments of ice cream and chocolate cake were served by the committee, Miss Maybelle Ball and Miss Isabel Johnson.

Guests of the club were Miss Katherine Chapman, Miss Eugenia Richards and John Stalaker and members present with their advisor, Miss Anna Gilles, were Mrs. June Healey, Harley Melzain, Miss Janice Black, Miss Isabel Johnson, Robert Marshall, Miss Doris Bolles, Miss Virginia Pope, Miss Elizabeth Straw, Miss Willetta Bozelle, Miss Maybelle Ball, Miss Dorothy Stedman and John Jamison.

The MIXING BOWL by ANN MEREDITH

Last Call for Simple Summer Desserts

No doubt you have heard that telling expression—pulling yourself up by your bootstraps. I have that little operation to perform quite often these days, and these verses always tilt the chin for me:

I have known life and love—I have known death and disaster—Foregathered with fools, succumbed to sin, been not unacquainted with shame.

Doubted—but yet held fast to a faith no doubt could o'ermaster—Won and lost. And I know it was all a part of the game.

Youth, and the dreams of youth—hopes, and the triumph of sorrow—I took as they came, I played them all—and I trumped the trick when I could.

And now, O Mover of Men, let the end be today or tomorrow, I have staked and played for myself—and You and the Game were good.

The author I do not know, but I can subscribe wholeheartedly to his expression of faith. As I have so many times said in this column, the possession of intestinal fortitude cannot be divorced from a well-starched vertebra, and without either one we are apt to be pretty messy.

TODAY'S RECIPE
Orange Bread
1 cake of yeast
1/4 cup tepid water
1 cup orange juice
3 tablespoons sugar
2 tablespoons melted butter
1/2 cup candied orange peel
1 cup chopped walnuts
3 cups white flour, or half white and half whole wheat flour

2 teaspoons salt
Let the candied orange peel for this loaf ourselves. Cut it in strips from good oranges, strip off all pulp and cook in several waters until the peel is soft. Drain, cut into strips and cook in a thick syrup until the peel takes up most of the syrup. Cool on buttered plate and roll in sugar. The syrup must be thick enough to spin a thread when the peel is put into it.

Put the cup or orange juice where it will get slightly warm. Break up the yeast cake and dissolve in the 1/4 cup of water. Combine the two, add sugar and salt, melted butter and enough flour to make a soft dough. The nut meats and candied orange peel go in now, then enough more flour is worked in to make the dough stiff enough to turn onto the board and knead.

A bit more flour may be necessary, but the dough should not be too stiff and floury—just use sufficient to make the dough handle easily. Knead about five minutes, then put the dough into a buttered bowl, spread top with melted butter, cover and let stand until it gets very light.

Turn onto the board, cut down with a knife and form into a small loaf. The balance can be made into little rolls—the clover-leaf type baked in muffin tins—or rolled out into a thin twist, laid in a pan and baked for a coffee cake. Brush the hot coffee cake with a little orange icing made with powdered sugar.

Occasionally a reader writes and asks me for a "balanced loaf" recipe. This is one of the best . . . energy foods . . . alkaline . . . vitamins . . . proteins for tissue building. A slice has slightly more than the calory value of plain bread due to the candied peel and nuts. About 150 calories per slice is right.

Last call for Simple Summer Desserts, the current leaflet. It may still be had, free of charge, if you mail me, today, a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

As usual till Monday!

FINDS MALES MORE FICKLE THAN WOMEN
LONDON, Eng.—The privilege of changing one's mind isn't exclusive to the female sex. To the contrary, London marriage registrars have found that males have become more fickle than the fair sex in cancelling marriages after licenses have been taken out.

In the past six months 1500 licenses have been taken out which have not been used in civil or ecclesiastical offices.

"In the majority of cases it has been the prospective bridegroom and not the bride who has cancelled the marriage with a last-minute excuse," one of the registrars says. "This prerogative for the change of mind appears to have been transferred to the bridegroom. In the present returns their excuses figure in over 60 per cent of the cancellations."

MUSIC LITERATURE ART

CHARLES GRIFFES

By RUTH ANDREWS

But a brief decade has passed since the untimely death of Charles Tomlinson Griffes, who has been termed by many appreciative critics "our American impressionist par excellence."

Stirred by the same poetic passion to portray his musical fancies in the impressionistic style which characterized the work of his French predecessor, Claude Debussy, and his British contemporary, Cyril Scott, Griffes' work today maintains an important place among the achievements of our own native-born modernist composers who have found alluring this certain type of musical expression.

Griffes unfortunately belonged to that pathetic following of youthful composers whose careers were cut short at the height of their powers by the fickle whim of fate. His sudden death at 36 served all the more to focus the attention of the musical world upon the unusually striking and individual quality of the work which he had already produced, despite its limited quantity.

Born in Elmira, New York, September 17, 1864, Griffes had already entered high school before he decided definitely to devote himself to a musical career, although he already had attained considerable proficiency as a pianist. Following his early education at Elmira academy and a period of piano study with Mary Broughton in his native city, he was allowed to go to Berlin for further training, fired by the ambition to become a concert pianist.

In Berlin Griffes spent four years in intensive musical study, studying piano with Jeddicks and Gottfried Galston, theory with Klatte and Loewengard, and composition with Ruffer and Humperdinck, German composer of the well-known opera, "Hansel and Gretel." It was the influence and encouragement of the latter that resulted in Griffes' determining to devote himself to composition instead of concertizing.

During his stay in the German capital Griffes gave piano lessons, also appearing in a public recital there during his 20th year. He had already begun to compose and during these early years abroad composed a sonata for piano.

In 1907, when he was 23, Griffes returned to America and secured a position as teacher of music in a school for boys at Tarrytown, N. Y., which he held up until the time of his death, 13 years later. In 1920 he also gave private lessons in piano and devoted his spare moments to the creative work he adored.

As a composer, the work of Griffes is divided into three periods, the first or early period showing strongly the influence of the German school, in which he had received his training. His second period evidenced strikingly the influence of the modern French school, as well as a Russian strain, and the ever-increasing love for the glamorous color and fantasy of oriental legend with which his later work is enriched.

To this second period belongs much of the descriptive or impressionistic work which first drew attention to Griffes, bringing forth widespread favorable comment. His familiar tone-pictures for the piano, much favored by contemporary concert artists, belong to this period. Of these, his best-known work, "Roman Sketches," includes the "White Peacock," exotic and languorous; "Nightfall," "The Fountain of the Acqua Paola" and "Clouds." Another descriptive work of this period is his "Lake at Evening."

To Griffes' final period, during the few years before his death, belong his ultra-modernistic work, his final trend of development. To this period belong his more ambitious works, including several for orchestra, the most important of which was "The Pleasure Dome of Kubla Khan," founded on the poem of Coleridge, and composed in 1919. On November 28 of that year this masterpiece was premiered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This latter work, thoroughly mature in style, intensely imaginative, and orchestrated in masterly fashion, is said to be one of the best examples of orchestral work by an American composer. It is said to be rich in the poetry and colorful splendor of the Orient, which is clearly reflected in the score. Indeed, this is not surprising when

BOOK REVIEWS

By MARY BURKE KING

Diana, by Heinrich Mann, published by Coward-McCann.

There are times when the omnivorous reader becomes satiated with themes and character types. Such is the time for "Diana" by Heinrich Mann, for it is a book that is different and one which challenges the understanding. The Diana of the theme was guileless and, untutored in the guile of the world, was unsuspecting and duped. She headed a movement in her country of Dalmatia for the liberation and education of the people. Plying the people and scornful of the brutality and limited intellect of the ruling aristocracy, she dreamed of a glorious future for the people. But the people were more stupid than the aristocrats and she failed in bringing them understanding even of herself. Again it was largely the failure of an utterly guileless person in a world of mistrusting and suspicious individuals.

Various emotions would be aroused in those about her and as an aftermath hatred because her very existence inspired unsatisfiable emotions in other people. The aftermath was bitterness and hatred. But Diana remained unsullied, for when the world of men was falling her new world of beauty opened up before her. The book is exceedingly interesting, but not by any means light reading and not a book which a large majority will feel repaid for having read.

Gabriel the Archangel, by Frederick Nardelli and Arthur Livingston, published by Harcourt, Brace & Co.

The proper approach to this book is, of course, through Gabriel d'Annunzio's works. But it is not the necessary approach in order to enjoy the book, for to many people the man d'Annunzio, his energy, his egotism, the secret of his charm are much more interesting than his writings.

In the course of their volume these authors say that d'Annunzio has no fear of biographers, for he has confidence in his own pen for confutation. Yet, they say, he has forgotten the power of portrayal of the biographer who would only present an accurate picture of the man, with the character appearing in actual colors as the facts progressed. It is that sort of book which these two authors have written. Because at times they describe events and actions of d'Annunzio which a friendly biographer would have glossed over, one has confidence in the truth of the picture of the poet which they present.

Throughout the book, amusingly enough, d'Annunzio is referred to as the "Archangel." "From his father, they say, doubtless came his warmth, his sensuality, his prodigality, his exuberance and his thirst for glory. But from his mother came his insatiable taste, his charm, his secretiveness, his vagueness but tenacity of purpose, his clarity and precision in action, his preference for dominating others through courtesy, finally a gift for accurate and close attention."

In the opinion of these writers, d'Annunzio, when he returned from the war, might have marched on Rome, as did Mussolini later. He was the popular hero, all Italy was at his feet, the premier and the king were afraid of him. But ever supermen make mistakes. "Perhaps the great mistake of his intelligence," say these writers, "was that he never realized that Fiume was really not big enough for an archangel."

d'Annunzio looms up as an astonishingly energetic individual, as a man of unique charm and destroying egotism, also a man brave and candid—in short, an enigma. In place one gasps at the audacity of the man and, most baffling of all, how can such charm and such candidness be united in the same character?

The Magazine Article, by Robert P. Crawford, published by the McGraw-Hill Book Company.

This book by Professor Crawford, full little volume. "The Price of Ignorance" must suffice as an example:

"The world is not so dark. It is the soul that's dark. Ignorance is the bane of life. The source of all our strife; And since the dawn of time, It is the cause of crime."

Book Notes . . .

In their forthcoming life of O. Henry, "The Caliph of Bagdad," Robert H. Davis and Arthur B. Maurice, the authors, reveal most interestingly the prices that O. Henry was paid for a number of his most famous stories. During the period of 1904-1908 O. Henry should have enjoyed a relative affluence, according to Mr. Davis and Mr. Maurice. For the earlier stories appearing in Munsey's he was paid at a rate of one cent a word or less. It may therefore be easily seen that O. Henry's fortunes rapidly rose when one considers that in July, 1908, he received $500 for "Hostages to Fortune," the same year $300 for "Telemachus' Friend," the following year $300 for "The Handbook of Hymens," $500 for "The Higher Abduction," with stories which received similar prices following that year in rapid succession.

"Kachalola or Mighty Hunter" (Morrow) is the early life and adventures of Dr. Sidney Spencer Broomfield, ivory hunter, prospector, specimen collector and doctor of medicine, as told by himself. It covers the author's first pioneer expeditions into Africa, Borneo, the South Seas and New Guinea during the years 1868-1876.

A number of poems written by the great 15th century poet, Francois Villon, are appearing in English for the first time in an edition of his works to be published by Covici-Friede late this month under the title "The Complete Works of Francois Villon."

Sinclair Lewis, only American novelist ever to receive the Nobel prize for literature, recently joined the ranks of writers who are contributing to Samuel Goldwyn's screen productions. In an agreement conveying to the picture producer the rights to "Arrowsmith," that Lewis was offered the Pulitzer prize in 1926, which he summarily rejected. Goldwyn has invited Sinclair Lewis to Hollywood to prepare his own adaptation and treatment of the story of the crusading bacteriologist.

Whitlsey House, McGraw-Hill Book Company, published three books May 1: "Building the World Society," a handbook of international relations edited by Laura Waples McMullen; "The Child From One to Twelve—Psychology for Parents," by Ada Hart Arlitt, and "Opticks," or a treatise of the reflections, refractions and colors of light, by Sir Isaac Newton, reprinted from the fourth edition with a foreword by Professor Albert Einstein and an introduction by Professor E. T. Whittaker.

Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote a "Main Street" a century ago. Not only is the title identical with Sinclair Lewis' but the idea of the small town as a core of American life is fundamentally the same. The editors of the Golden Book, having discovered the fact, have reprinted the story in the June number.

The Co-ordinating Council on Nature Activities has sponsored the publication and recommends the use of a list of books and pamphlets on nature study work in school, home and camp. The list includes "Mushrooms of Field and Wood," by Margaret McKenney; "Animal Pests" by Bertha Chapman Cady; "Indian Lore and Indian Gardens," by Dr. Gilmore of the University of Michigan; and "Music and the Out-of-Doors," by Laura Granberry Snow.

Dunsilla Ladine Young de Martino became the bride of George Seides on Saturday, May 2, at Toulon, France. George Seides is well known as a war correspondent and journalist. He has led a colorful and eventful life all over the world and has the faculty for being on the spot when news is breaking. He is known as the stormy petrel of the press and his book "Can These Things Be!" which has just been published, is creating a sensation and causing quite some comment. The Countess de Martino has also led a very exciting life. She was born in Moody, Texas, married a Spanish count, at one time was a prisoner in a harem in Morocco, has starred in Russian movies and was a member of the cast of "Street Singer" in New York.

A memorial erected by American admirers of Thomas Hardy was unveiled by Professor J. Livingston Lowes of Harvard and Oxford universities recently at Higher Beckhampton, Dorchester, England. On a lane near the monument is the tiny cottage where Hardy was born and close by is Max Gate, the house where he died and where his widow still lives. Hardy's great epic drama of the war with Napoleon—"The Dynamos"—has just been brought out by MacMillan in a new edition—three volumes in one.

THE TINYMITES

STORY BY NAL COCHRAN—PICTURES BY KNICK
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

"Hey, look, this is a lot of fun," cried Carpy. "and when I am done I'll let you all walk on those stilts if our friend doesn't care. I know I'd hate to have you miss a rather thrilling treat like this. It makes me feel so funny, walking 'way up in the air.'"

The Travel Man turned to the lad who owned the stilts. "I would be glad," he said, "to pay you for the use of your stilts. Here's some change." The youngster smiled from ear to ear and said, "I'm glad you all came here. We're always kind to visitors, so they won't feel so strange."

Then Scouty said: "The man was right who said the Japs were all polite. And now I'd like to have my turn at walking 'way up high." He took the stilts and walked around. Then he shouted, "Goodness me, the ground looks far away. Please catch me if I fall while passing by."

The others also took a turn. Said Carpy, "It's not hard to learn. In fact, you can do anything if you make up your mind. All people who refuse to quit are never sorry one wee bit. It's folks who give up in disgust who always are behind."

Soon Mister Travel Man cried, "Say! We'd better travel on our way. A very pretty garden's near. Let's walk right over there." They walked a half a mile or so and then one Tiny shouted, "Oh, the garden must be wonderful. Its perfume's in the air!" A mass of flowers soon greeted all. "Course some were short and some were tall. And, in the midst of some of them, two pretty Jap girls stood. In perfect English one girl said, 'If you want flowers, go right ahead and pick a pretty bouquet.'" "Course the bunch were glad they could."

FARM NEWS FROM EVERYWHERE

WALNUT COSTS PRESENTED BY FARM ADVISOR

A meeting of walnut growers of Orange county was held at the farm advisor's office to review the costs of various orchard operations that are required in the production of walnuts in this area.

The 1930 cost figures compiled by Farm Advisor Harold E. Wahlberg from detailed data submitted by a representative group of walnut growers in Orange county revealed that it costs on the average $222.23 per acre per year to produce walnuts. This total includes labor, $56.08; material, $22.33; cash, overhead, $37.37 (taxes, insurance, etc.), and interest and depreciation amounting to $108.45. Expressed in cost per pound it figures 19.3 cents. The report follows:

"The summary of the cost study covering the business of 1930 indicates that the 1930 crop year was one of comparatively light yields, influenced to some extent by delayed dormancy and foliation—1148 pounds per acre as compared with 1929 pounds in 1929. Factors affecting yield were variety, amount of irrigation, season of irrigation, age of trees and pest control.

"The percentage of Diamonds varied from 17.6 per cent in seedlings to 24.5 per cent in the buds. The percentage merchantable nuts varied from 68.5 per cent to 93.9 per cent. The reasons for low quality should be determined and causes remedied. The principal factors affecting quality appear to be variety, season of water application, pest control, age of trees, and soils.

"The amount of water used in these orchards during the year ranged from 14 acre inches to 43 acre inches. The higher profit group used more water (29.4 acre inches) than the lower profit group (20.7 acre inches). The higher yielding group also used more water and more consistently during the winter, spring and summer seasons than did the lower yielding group. In analyzing quality production it was found that 100 per cent of the orchards reporting highest quality nuts irrigated during the winter season, while only 75 per cent of the orchards reporting lower quality irrigated in the winter.

"Cultivation costs in 1930 ranged from $7.90 to $80 per acre. Orange county cultivation costs are generally too high. They average $16.34 per acre as compared with $8.77 per acre in Los Angeles county and $9.25 per acre in San Bernardino county. Orchards reporting low cultivation costs had better net income, better yields, and practically equal quality to the orchards reporting high cultivation costs. There is room for saving in this item.

"The higher yielding orchards and the orchard reporting higher quality nuts showed results from higher pest control costs. The orchards reporting pest control averaged 1.18 cents better price per pound and greater returns per acre than the orchards that did not spray or dust.

"Harvesting costs ranged from $1.37 to $2.40 per hundredweight. Several orchards having equal yields reported as much as 100 per cent difference in harvesting costs. Better quality of nuts is affected by prompt harvesting methods but should not unduly increase costs.

"Reduction of operating expenses without affecting quality and yield is an economic necessity in the walnut industry of this area. Labor costs in 1930 ranged from $27.43 to $90.35 per acre in the orchards of this study. Material

GAIN HEALTH AND PROFITS

Former Bookkeeper and Student Win Out on Louisiana Farm

BATON ROUGE, La., May 30.—Laura Randolph, former stenographer and bookkeeper, and Cora Dancy, who intended to be a doctor, have turned out to be two of Louisiana's most progressive farmers.

A few years ago Cora received a degree from Millaps college, Jackson, Miss., and intended taking a course in medicine in New Orleans, Illness, however, forced her to retire from school and move here to recuperate.

In the meantime Laura was in the midst of a humdrum routine consisting of typing form letters, making out invoices and entering figures in a huge ledger. Business life grew stale, so she sought out her girl friend, Cora and suggested that they move to the country.

Cora consented. The girls purchased two acres of land from Cora's uncle. On it they built a little home and started raising chickens. Soon finding two acres couldn't begin to furnish enough territory to take care of their ideas, they bought more land.

After the first year on the farm, the girls could show a slight profit. Going into the second year they again increased their holdings and diversified their farming. Today they operate Hurricane Ranch, consisting of 15 acres which they own, and 225 acres which they rent. They raise everything from spinach to Belgian hares.

POTATO INCREASE
Preliminary estimates set the country's 1931 production of potatoes at 430,000,000 bushels, an increase of 9,000,000 bushels over 1930's production.

Costs varied from $5.30 to $45.78 per acre. Cash overhead including insurance and taxes, principally, varied from $9.09 to $95.05 per acre. This item cannot be materially changed. A study of labor and material costs in some orchards should lead to lower and more efficient expenditures.

CAMPAIGN ON FIRE HAZARDS STARTED HERE

Foreseeing the fire hazard conditions that have brought numerous fires in the state recently and portend more before the summer season ends, the Agricultural Extension service of the University of California has suggested rules that will aid in fire prevention, according to W. M. Cory, assistant farm advisor.

Pointing out the critical situation that exists, Cory says: "The Agricultural Extension service is meeting this emergency with an intensive campaign of fire protection education, in co-operation with Forestry service. Equipment for fire fighting from the pall of water and wet sack to one of the most modern fire trucks of the state division of forestry has been used in various educational meetings.

"In addition, detailed instructions for a fire prevention survey have been outlined before many groups in Orange county. The emphasis here is on a thorough clean-up of fire hazards on as many ranches as possible. The National Board of Fire Underwriters has given its co-operation in making available a supply of the publication entitled, 'Safeguarding the Farm Against Fire.'

"Emphasis is being placed on the following points in this campaign:

"Clean up all rubbish and dry vegetation from around buildings. 'Have a ladder handy so as to be able to get up on roofs if necessary.

"Clean out soot from chimneys and flues and see that they are in good repair.

"Do not store gasoline in or near buildings and use every precaution in handling it.

"Throw a firebreak around grain fields and along routes of travel.

"Have at least one piece of fire fighting equipment ready to use on the instant.

"Help the community organize a volunteer fire fighting crew."

SACRAMENTO, May 30.—A steady increase in the per capita consumption of oranges in most of the important consuming countries has accompanied the upward trend in orange production in California and other areas.

This is revealed in a report on mile with the state department of agriculture, which also indicates that grapefruit is gaining steadily in favor.

Australia has the highest apparent per capita consumption of oranges, with an average of approximately 32 pounds. The United Kingdom, the United States, and Canada follow closely with 19.9, 18.1 and 17.5 pounds respectively.

The present consumption of grapefruit in the United States is about six pounds per capita. Canada a little over two pounds and in the United Kingdom, slightly over one pound. Officials of the department point out that if the leading western and northwestern European countries, excluding the United Kingdom, were to raise their consumption of grapefruit to one pound per capita, the total imports of grapefruit would be about 2,600,000 boxes instead of the 30,000 boxes now imported.

Consumption of the fruit in Germany and France is increasing steadily, but still is of minor importance in the world market, it is reported.

DESTRUCTIVE 'HOPPERS

From one-sixth to nearly one-half of the forage obtained from the grasslands is destroyed by grasshoppers, according to an estimate of Prof. A. G. Vestal, of the University of Illinois.

MARKET SERVICE BEING ENLARGED

SACRAMENTO, May 30.—California's market news service, the farmer's link to world price and supply conditions affecting sale of his commodities, is due for a lively expansion, the state department of agriculture announced today.

As a result of allocation of additional money for this work by the U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics, livestock, poultry, dairy, hay, feed and seed services will be greatly stimulated or expanded, according to the department's May report to Governor Rolph.

A new report service, covering poultry and dairy commodities in Los Angeles will be inaugurated before July 1 and expansion of grading and inspection work, much needed in the south, also will be undertaken.

Medfly Found In Fruit Basket Of Ship's Passenger

Score another victory for California in the state department of agriculture's constant campaign to keep the state free from the fruit industry's deadliest enemy—Mediterranean fruit fly.

One mango found at the bottom of a basket of so-called "California" fruit possessed by a passenger who recently disembarked at San Pedro from Honolulu was found to contain at least 200 live larvae of that insect, which has infested portions of the islands for many years.

The discovery was made by Port Inspector W. N. Ross, according to A. C. Fleury, senior quarantine supervisor for the department, on May 16. Needless to say, the basket and contents were destroyed.

Cuba, with an annual output of about 5,000,000 tons of sugar, is the world's largest single source of the sweet.

MRS. BURBANK CARRIES ON EXPERIMENTS

SCIENTISTS OF STATE PUZZLED BY ODD PLANTS

SANTA ROSA, Calif., May 30.—Six years after the death of Luther Burbank, famed plant wizard who gave to the world thousands of hybrid plants, flowers and fruits, botanists and plant specialists are still trying to solve his "garden of puzzles."

Strange, outlandish plants, created in the fertile imagination of the wizard, are coming into being in the gardens. Plants and shrubs which a year ago seemed to be destined to grow into one type of plant or shrub today are showing entirely alien characteristics.

The widow of the famous plant breeder, with the help of the Stark brothers, of Louisiana, Mo., and old

John Bertino Burbank's faithful gardener, is carrying on his work. But although they have made much progress in classifying the plant "freaks" there are thousands which still remain puzzles.

"Surprises are in store for us every time we go into the gardens," Mrs. Burbank says. "Even the horticulturalists can't as yet name some of the strange flowers and fruits and plants which are growing in the gardens."

Surprises in Plants

"It is really a garden of puzzles. 'Plants, which early in spring we feel sure will be small shrubs, blossom into eight and 10-foot giants! It's uncanny. In every-thing we can still see the hand of Luther Burbank at work, but whether he was tending we do not know."

"Horticulturalists carrying on the experiments are working blindly in many cases, hoping something in the growing plants will show what was intended by the master who has gone."

Mrs. Burbank pointed to a pink-flowered, odorless, spear-shaped plant, as tall as herself.

"That was a tiny little thing this spring," she said. "Look at it now!"

I don't know what it is, neither do the Stark brothers. University of California professors have failed to classify it. We are waiting, hoping that it will show kinship with some other known plant of the flower kingdom."

On the Sebastopol experimental garden acres, the horticulturalists are gathering everything that Burbank experimented with. Wherever possible experiments are being continued in the manner intended by Burbank according to the notes left in his voluminous books.

But where no records of these experiments are available, the experimental plants are being gathered into one section of the garden and allowed to grow in an effort to determine what Burbank intended them to be.

Rows upon rows of these hybrids, "orphans of the garden," may be found in the gardens.

Gardener Carries On

At Santa Rosa, at the gardens in which Burbank made his home, only old John Bertino remains to continue the planting, thinning, watering and propagation of the flowers and shrubs. It is almost entirely a garden of flowers.

Century Plant Ready To Bloom

GERPER, Cal., May 30.—Planted back in the days when California was under Mexican rule, a century plant here is just about ready to bloom.

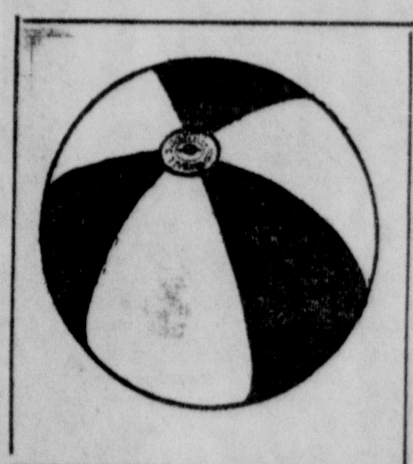

The stalk of the plant resembles a huge asparagus, and is growing on an average of eight inches a day, according to William Underhill, Tehama postmaster.

Pioneer residents claim the century plant was planted by O. G. Toomes, one of the five original land grant owners of Tehama county, who introduced the mission olive, eucalyptus, elm and maple trees to this section of the country.

Two-story frame dwelling, reminiscent of the New England from which Burbank came, and in which Burbank resided for many years with his mother, has been restored by Mrs. Burbank and is now occupied by her, "Bonita," Burbank's faithful fox terrier, which was with him when he died, lives with her. The dog is 14 years old.

In the front yard is the Cedar of Lebanon, planted by Luther Burbank and under which he lies buried. Beside him is the grave of Dr. Joseph H. Shaw, Burbank's personal physician and close friend. The newer Burbank home across the street is to be converted into a Burbank museum and shrine. A committee of California citizens is sponsoring the project.

Beet, Cane Sugar Output For Year Shows Big Gain

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 30.—A world record in cane and beet sugar production was established in the 1930-31 season with a crop estimated at 31,506,000 short tons as compared with the previous record world crop of 30,671,000 short tons in 1928-29, according to the bureau of agricultural economics, U. S. department of agriculture.

The bureau says that the plan to limit exports from important sugar producing countries is the current world sugar situation, but that Cuba is as yet the only producing country to limit actual production in connection with controlling exports.

The record world crop is attributed largely to sharp increases in beet sugar production. Record world stocks of sugar, unusually low prices for raw sugar, and a check in the upward trend in world sugar consumption are other features of the current situation, says the bureau.
